ABC NEWS PAYS VISIT TO PROENERGY SERVICES

Bret Hovell, field producer for ABC News based in the Washington bureau, recently visited ProEnergy Services corporate headquarters in Sedalia, MO.

Hovell has been covering a story on the internship program funded by the US government through the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. This plan, also known as the “economic stimulus package,” was signed into law by President Obama earlier this year. The summer employment program helps place youth into paid internships in high-tech jobs, and ProEnergy is utilizing the program.

ProEnergy is currently employing five interns. “This program has allowed these students to work hands-on in their areas of study, when they may not have had the opportunity otherwise,” said Cara Canon, Director of Marketing for ProEnergy. “It is working well for not only the interns but our company as well.” The Missouri Department of Economic Development’s local Workforce Investment Boards helped students identify career fields of interest and then placed them with appropriate employers.

Having ABC News at the corporate headquarters brought national attention to the fast growing company. “We are honored that we were selected, and are looking forward to seeing the story,” said Canon.

ProEnergy provides integrated services to the global energy industry. The company has U.S. offices in Sedalia, MO; Atlanta, GA; Houston, TX; and Tulsa, OK; and overseas locations in Argentina, Mexico, Venezuela, Pakistan, Panama and Ghana. More information is available on its website at www.proenergyservices.com.
